With Compliments

Most law firms design their letterhead to express their corporate personality. The justification may be that the firm's documentation should express the firm's professional image. The problem with professional image is that it arises in the eye of the beholder - the client. In the same way, your credibility doesn't reflect your honesty but whether the public believes you are honest.

Back to letterhead: when your client or some other person receives a message on your letterhead, what is their first impression? Do they perceive your firm to be friendly, direct, open, and easy to deal with? Or do they perceive your firm to be stuffy, top-heavy, old-fash-
